British Premier Seeks Rest From Cares of State

PROBABLY no man in Europe rests under heavier burdens and responsibilities than the Premier of Great Britain. The tasks that were his during the World War were enormous, and those that have followed have perhaps taxed him quite as heavily. In addition to her domestic questions of trade, unemployment and staggering taxes, the British Empire has had stupendous problems to meet in Ireland,

India and Egypt and in the question of German reparations and the economic recovery of Europe. Upon no one have these problems weighed more heavily than on the British Premier. His troubles have been increased by the defection of a strong section of the Coalition Party and the results of recent by-elections have not been encouraging. It is not surprising therefore that he has sought a short rest in Wales.

Egypt Proclaimed as an Independent and Sovereign State

MARCH 16 was a great day for modern Egypt, for on that day her independence and sovereignty were proclaimed, and Ahmed Fuad Pasha, who had been the nominal native ruler under British protection, assumed the title of King of Egypt. For the last 2,000 years no Prince of the ancient native blood had sat on the throne of Egypt. The history of the land has been one of oppression and for the most part of incapable misrule since the time of the Caesars. Saracen and Turk have held it under their sway and drained it of its natural wealth and resources, with little regard for the welfare of the people. Following the collapse of the Arabi Pasha insurrection in 1881-1882, it came under the virtual control of the British Government. In the main it has been wisely and justly governed, and the great engineering enterprises that have been inaugurated have added greatly to the fertility of the soil and the prosperity of the people. Administrators like Lord Cromer and Viscount Allenby have discharged their tasks with great ability. But following the World War the nationalistic impulse that spread all over the world found an echo in Egypt, and for the last four years the British authorities have been taxed to their utmost to suppress local riots and prevent a general uprising that would have involved the whole land in chaos. Largely at the instance and upon the recommendations of Allenby, they have finally agreed to Egypt's proclamation of independence. Simultaneously all British Ambassadors and Ministers abroad have been instructed to inform the Governments to which they are accredited of Great Britain's abandonment of her protectorate. Certain reservations bear on the security of British imperial communications in Egypt; the defense of Egypt against all foreign control or interference, direct or indirect, and the protection of foreign interests and foreign communities in Egypt.

The former Sultan of Egypt now becomes King of Egypt. There is a certain significance in the Egyptian monarch's choice of his new title. The term Sultan, the root meaning of which is one possessing authority, has a connotation like the Western term of Emperor or King.

The new King is of Albanian descent, one of the successors of the great adventurer of a century ago, Mehemet Ali, who fought his way up to recognition as Khedive by the Ottoman Sultan.

An incidental point connected with the new regime is that German and other ex-enemy citizens in Egypt do not enjoy the extra-territorial privileges enjoyed by other nationals.

It had been hoped that, following the signing of the treaty between the delegates from Ireland and the British authorities, the troubles of the distracted island would be over and that the Irish Free State would go forward to peace and prosperity, beset by none but the ordinary difficulties that attend the establishment of any new Government. That hope, however, has not been borne out by events. There is pronounced disaffection in the Republican Army and the threat has been freely made that it proposed to set up a rival Government. Mutiny broke out when some units of the army entered Limerick, seized several buildings at strategic points and defied the Provisional Government to eject them. Fortunately no serious disorders followed, but the situation is grave.

French Device for Guiding Airplanes Through Fogs

Airplanes with contrivances that enable it to be guided at night or through fogs by signals from a wire stretched on poles over the earth. The figures A, B and C represent, respectively, the horizontal, transversal and longitudinal frames that receive the signals.

VERY ingenious and useful is the plan contrived by a French inventor, M. Loth, for guiding airplanes by night and in fog by means of a wire traversing the line of flight desired and extended a short distance above the ground. A description by M. Raymond Lestoanet gives the principle of the device. When the form of the magnetic field was discovered, the equipment for receiving the guiding thread (comprising three frames: two vertical ones for the direction; one longitudinal, and one transversal, and a horizontal frame for the investigation of the guiding thread at high altitudes) was placed on a Nieuport-Delage transport plane and on a Farman bi-motor. These frames are formed of insulated copper screws; a telephone cable attached to them conveys to the ear the "song" of the guiding cable, the variations of which allow the pilot to direct the plane by the sound. The frames in the fuselage cannot be seen from the outside. It was soon apparent that the noise due to the magnetos considerably impaired the sound. This was a new problem. It was solved by means of a little receiving frame, specially constructed and so placed that the noise from the magnetos was nearly suppressed. * * * The navigation of the plane or dirigible is similar to that of ships guided by the same means. When the apparatus, moving in the air, makes parallel route to the guiding cable, the longitudinal frame gets the maximum of sound.

Line set up on the same principle as telegraph lines and indicating the line of flight to be followed by airplanes flying over definite routes or between given points. The song of the wire caused by a strong current passing through it is transmitted to an airplane flying above and by the sound the pilot of the plane is able to keep his course parallel with the wire.

Demonstration being given of the delicate machinery by means of which the inventor of the "Ariadne thread" calculated the magnetic field traversed by an alternating current of 600 vibrations a second. It was a lengthy undertaking and demanded almost endless calculations, but the problem was finally solved.

Like the human foot — the proper shoe has a flexible arch

"In the natural foot the arch is flexible and plays an important part in every step. When the shank of the shoe is stiff, this natural movement is prevented and the muscles deteriorate from disuse. Ability to maintain the necessary strength of the foot depends upon allowing the foot muscles free action. The shank of the shoe should be flexible."—Augusta Rucker, M. D., in McCall's Magazine.

CANTILEVER SHOES have the flexible shank which allows the foot free action and supreme comfort. No strip of rigid metal lies concealed in the arch of these shoes as in all ordinary shoes.

When you lace a Cantilever Shoe, the flexible shank is drawn up snugly under the arch of your foot, giving restful support. The arch muscles are free to maintain—or regain—their natural strength by the mere act of exercise. Thus are weak or fallen arches—and other ills—avoided or corrected.

In addition, Cantilever Shoes have further characteristics which make them more comfortable and more efficient than ordinary shoes. A natural sole line. Room for the toes without crowding. Good heels, rightly placed. An extensive range of widths and lengths to insure perfect fit.

And they have a grace of contour and the unmistakable "quality look" which harmonizes with the most distinguished apparel. Prices are reasonable.

If no dealer listed at the right is near you, write the manufacturers, Morse & Burt Co., 11 Carlton Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., for the address of a nearby dealer and the Cantilever Shoe Booklet.
